Information Systems Resources Earns Multiple Industry Certifications

Certifications acknowledge e-waste recycling company's status as responsible industry leader

DEARBORN, Mich. 5/28/2015 – Information Systems Resources (ISR), a leading provider of services and products designed to build and manage computer network infrastructures, today announced that it has earned certifications from multiple industry groups based on meeting rigorous standards.

ISR has received multiple certifications from several organizations:

- e-Stewards certification, which has the endorsement of major environmental groups, demonstrates a responsible disposition of hazardous electronic waste throughout the supply chain.
- The Responsible Recycling (R2) Rev. 7/2013 Standard for Electronics Recyclers as established by the R2 Technical Advisory Committee.
- ISO 14001:2004 certification ensures that the company has met standards related to maintaining appropriate environmental management systems to ensure that environmental impact is being measured and improved.
- U.S. Department of Labor's Occupational Safety & Health Administration (OSHA) 18001:2007 with regard to employee safety.

"We are proud to have earned certification from the various organizations as they are a testament to our company's commitment to maintaining responsible business practices for our staff, clients and the public," said ISR founder and CEO Luther Elliott. "ISR is a leader in recycling e-waste because, in addition to extracting valuable resources for re-use by manufacturers, we do so in way designed to have a minimal impact on the environment."

ISR processes more than two million pounds of unneeded electronics on an annual basis. They specialize in providing complete cradle-to-grave IT asset management services including front-end procurement, warehousing, equipment staging, software image management, asset tagging, just-in-time delivery and installation and remarketing and recycling of assets.
